Food hygiene, such as washing vegetables and utensils is important but hand hygiene is even more important. Hands are the most exposed part of the body to germs. Touching the eyes, mouth, nose or food transfers the germs into the body. Teach your children to wash hands with soap and water before meals and after using the toilet.

5 According to the extract, hand hygiene is extremely important because hands are

- A used to touch the mouth, nose or food
- B needed to wash vegetables and utensils
- C the most exposed part of the body to germs
- D to be washed with soap and water before meals

PETALING JAYA: The public needs to be constantly reminded of the Social Welfare Department's hotline "Talian Nur" set up to offer assistance to the poor, needy and anyone in need of aid.

"The hotline is effective because it makes the department accessible to the public," said the department's Director, Rashid Zainal.

More information can be obtained directly from the Social Welfare Department's website at www.swd.gov.my.

As Malaysians, this is how we can help each other. Inform us if you know of those in need of help.

7 The aim of the hotline is to

- A make the department within reach of the public
- B help all Malaysians settle their financial problems
- C remind the public of the Social Welfare Department's needs
- D obtain more information about the Social Welfare Department

8 The phrase the poor, needy and anyone in need of aid most probably refers to

- A social workers
- B welfare officers
- C private schoolchildren
- D unemployed single parents

Questions 26 – 31 are based on the following passage.

- 1 I had to go to a business meeting that wet afternoon of July 26. Mumbai people are used to monsoon rains that routinely flood the city's roads and bring transport to a halt. So it was no big deal that I was out like most people in this go-go city. After an hour and a half trying to negotiate through traffic, I got stuck in gridlock. It was half past four and I settled in for a long wait. 5
- 2 Many hours had passed. The rain still slapped ferociously on the windscreen, and the sky was inky black. But the car radio played romantic Bollywood songs from the city's cheery FM stations. A disc jockey was even holding out the promise of rain-soaked commuters meeting potential partners during the long night. I laughed and looked at my watch. It was 2 a.m. I decided to walk home. Wading through knee-deep water, I met some friendly firemen who forbade me to go any further. "It could be risky, madam," one of them said. "There were strong currents in the water." 10
- 3 Then I saw three girls. They said they had been walking for hours to get home and were exhausted. I took them back with me to my car. Suddenly a few firemen emerged out of the darkness and knocked on the car window, asking if we needed help. We were famished and asked for food. They had food, the firemen said and so we went with them to a half-constructed building nearby where we gobbled cakes and drank black tea. Not far away was a school bus packed with children – the men had freed the trapped students as well. 20
- 4 It was still pouring around three in the morning but we decided to begin our long march home through the swirling, greasy near neck-deep water. One of the girls was very short, so we told her to walk on the road divider and hold our hands. In the eerie, rain-whipped night, we felt as if we were floating. As we walked on, more and more people joined us to form a chain. "Don't feel embarrassed, madam," said a young man to a girl in the chain. "Hold my hand." We passed dark homes and shops. 25
- 5 People chanted hymns, sang songs and cracked jokes. Their favourite song was "Just chill, chill, just chill" – a fun Bollywood ditty* rocking India at the time. Whenever we came across a car, people yelled, "No parking! It's a traffic offence!" There were two Mercedes Benzes and a Toyota Lexus floating in the water. A man in a big car was scooping out water with a small tiffin box. By now, our group of four rain girls had grown to a chain of a few hundred people. Along the way, one woman met her husband, also wading through the water and happily joined him. 30
- 6 I had forgotten the tiredness, the grime and the potential dangers. The sheer spirit of it all was fantastic. I reached home around five in the morning. My four-year-old daughter beamed when she saw me and burst into tears. My husband wasn't back; I learned later that he'd stayed at his office and had dined well. 35
- 7 The trek was an eye-opener, a testimony to the courageous spirit of the city's people. They have stopped expecting anything from politicians. So when the city turned into a dangerous water world, they helped each other. It was business as usual, in a way. 40

32 Read the following poem on The Road Not Taken and answer the questions that follow.

Two roads diverged in a yellow wood,
And sorry I could not travel both
And be one traveler, long I stood
And looked down one as far as I could
To where it bent in the undergrowth;

Then took the other, as just as fair,
And having perhaps the better claim,
Because it was grassy and wanted wear;
Though as for that the passing there
Had worn them really about the same,

And both that morning equally lay
In leaves no step had trodden black.
Oh, I kept the first for another day!
Yet knowing how way leads on to way,
I doubted if should ever come back.

I shall be telling this with a sigh
Somewhere ages and ages hence:
Two roads diverged in a wood, and I -
I took the one less traveled by,
And that has made all the difference.

33 Read the extract from the short story The Necklace below and answer the questions that follow.

At the end of ten years, they had paid everything, everything with the rates of usury and the accumulations of the compound interest.

Madam Loisel looked old now. She had become the woman of impoverished households – strong and hard and rough. With frowsy hair, skirts askew and red hands, she talked loud while washing the floor with great swishes of water. But sometimes, when her husband was at the office, she sat down near the window and thought of that gay evening of long ago, of that ball where she had looked so beautiful and been so much admired.

What would have happened if she had not lost that necklace? Who knows? Who knows? How strange and changeable is life! How small a thing is needed to make or ruin us!

- a) Why did Madame Loisel look old?
..... [1 mark]
- b) What kept her happy all these ten years?
..... [1 mark]
- c) What would have happened if Madame Loisel had not lost that necklace?
.....[1 mark]
- d) If you had borrowed the necklace and lost it, what would you do?
Explain why.
